We've had plenty of reports about this nine-foot two-inch giant from Russia, who has been engaged by Oscar Hammerstein for his Paralise Roof Gardens, but a very important person-age in the Machnow menage has been almost overlooked.

For the benefit of ladies who fancy themselves married to 'perfect brutes' of husbands, and who enjoy writing their woes to heart and home experts, and for the sake of argumentative unmarried ladies who are always present with long, loud philosophical sayings on manage a husband, we have filched a few choice recipes from the Queen of husband managers.

When he makes up his mind to a thing he sticks to it, no matter how unreasonable. That is when I have to resort to tears. He is really the kindest hearted man imaginable and, in spite of the fact that he is so big, he is as gentle as a child."

Morris Guest and Oscar Bollinger, who have had experience with the glant, looked a little dublous at this statement.

nent.

"He is anything but docile," said Mr. Guest, " with agents or even police, but his wife can do anything she pleases with him, if she just uses tact."

"Are you ever afraid your husband might raise his hand against you when he gets peevish?" we asked the giant's wife. Mrs. Machnow laughed heartly.

"Why. I never was afraid of him even though I didn't want to marry him at first."

The story of the giant's wooling jan't.

"Why, I never was afraid of him even though I didn't want to marry him at first."

The story of the giant's woolng isn't as romantle as one of those love at first sight stories might be.

Mrs. Machnow was in love with the Russian village priest, but her father, who was thrifty, saw the possibility of money in the hig giant. He forced his daughter to narry Machnow one night after there had been much drinkling of vodka.

"Now I love him very much," said Mrs. Machnow, naively, "I soon got used to him."

Simple and Unlearned.

In spite of the fact that Machnow ought to be a high thinker, living as he does in the rarified heights to which his 3 feet 2 inches entitle him, he isn't much given to the higher life intellectually. The great fellow is as simple as an unlearned peasant, but he is shrewd nevertheless in some things.

One of his strongest emotions is jealousy of his wife. A mere man reporter who ventured to discourse pleasant, but he sake the company was being cut the Keystone Company was being only to Mrs. Machnow came near causing a scene of extreme demestic infellect tally.
